

Coordinating ergonomic and adaptive equipment

When an employee has an approved accommodation requiring special ergonomic or adaptive items, ensuring they receive the right items so they can return to work can be a challenging process. Our experienced vocational team can help.

We coordinate items such as ergonomic chairs, sit/stand desks, headsets, raised keyboards, speech recognition software and screen reader applications to convert text to speech.

No matter what the employee's needs are, locating the right products and devices in a timely, cost-effective manner is crucial. The longer the employee waits for these items, it prolongs the timeframe needed to complete the accommodation process and, more importantly, it can negatively impact their productivity and well-being. Our experts offer valuable services for employers and help keep employees healthy and productive at work.

Streamlining the process

Our vocational team has decades of experience coordinating ergonomic and adaptive equipment for employees. Below are some of our key services that offer benefits for clients:

- We collaborate with the employee, provider(s), accommodation team and/or the employer to clarify the individual's requirements
- Our colleagues provide regular updates so the employee understands their needs are being addressed
- Our team coordinates all steps in the process including ordering, delivering and setting up the equipment, and educating users
- We research options, including cost and availability, using our extensive ancillary provider network to obtain competitive pricing

We are here to help

To support a successful return to work, we help ensure your employees receive the items they need quickly and efficiently. Sedgwick's vocational experts look at the work process and the impact on employees and recommend specialized equipment to assist with the accommodation request, prevent injuries and increase productivity.
